Some country-music fans got down and dirty on Sunday during the final day of the Craven Country Jamboree music festival.

Partied hard, partied smart

Going down to Craven, gonna have myself a time. Organizers and attendees praise calm Country Jamboree

The 2013 edition of the Craven Country Jamboree wrapped up Sunday, with organizers reporting a relatively calm showing for the annual music festival.

"(The RCMP) is quite pleased (with the event) — it's been a normal year for them," said Kimberley Blevins, director of marketing for the festival.

Blevins said organizers and local RCMP met every day during the festival, adding that there didn't appear to be any major problems.

Hosted in the small village of Craven, the Country Jamboree has gained a reputation over the years for being, at times, a hotbed for rowdy partying.

But most attendees said this year's edition was fairly tame, while still providing a fun and exciting party atmosphere.

"I haven't heard of anything crazy happening," said Saskatoon native Emily Dyrland. "I feel like my mom had nothing to worry about."

Many festivalgoers noted that the peaceful atmosphere could be linked to the noticeable police presence at the event.

"I think that's a big reason people aren't getting out of control," said Edmonton native David Ahl.

"I've noticed them," said festivalgoer Heather Hudson. "(My friend and I) had to dump out our drinks a couple of times (because) we were on the road."

Alberta natives Samantha White, Samantha Jones and Raeshel Richardson also noticed a heightened police presence at the event but praised the local RCMP for their courtesy and professionalism.

"There's a definite presence," Jones said.

"But they're not that bad," added White. "They're not rude and they don't come and harass you."

City's second homicide of 2013 investigated

Saskatoon Police are investigating the city's second homicide of the year after the body of a man was found in a broken down pickup truck on Thursday.

At approximately 11:55 p.m. police officers made a routine stop on Circle Drive, just south of 11 Street West, to check on a 1998 black Ford pickup truck that had been left parked on the side of the road.

Alexander Holdner, 25, was found dead in the vehicle. An autopsy later revealed it was a homicide. Holdner had recently moved to Saskatoon from Young, Sask. METRO

Help from anglers sought in decoding hybrid fish

Anglers in Saskatchewan are being asked to help reel in information about a hybrid fish.

Chris Somers, an ecologist at the University of Regina, is hoping that anyone looking for good fishing holes before an upcoming walleye tournament will bring him a specimen that could be a cross between a walleye and a sauger. It's known as a saugeye.

"What we are trying to do is to get a DNA-based approach up and running to detect hybrids reliably between those two species," said Somers.

The first step of Somers's research is to develop a detection method with DNA-based tools ready in the lab. He needs a tissue sample, like from a fin clip, to do the analysis.

Somers and research staff plan to be stationed at the boat launch in Saskatchewan Landing Provincial Park on Thursday and Friday, the pre-fishing period for a big walleye tournament next weekend. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Roughriders fans remain confident team will do well

Simply perfect.
Rider Nation weighs in on 3-0 start

MORGAN MODJESKI

As the Saskatchewan Roughriders start with a 3-0 record for a second consecutive season, members of Rider Nation are confident their team will keep it together.

Lee Sparrowhawk, an engineer in Saskatoon, said he feels positive about the team's prospects this season.

"I think they're in a better position than they were last year," said Sparrowhawk. "I think they'll falter a little bit, but they're a much deeper team.

"They have to keep expectations realistic."

Others, like season-ticket holder Kyrstin Wagner from Regina, were all about keeping it positive.

"Yeah, they're going all the way," she said. "I got my (Grey Cup) tickets already!"

Madeline Press, a nurse and a life-long Riders fan, echoed Wagner in her confidence, saying she feels the team has the potential to keep the winning streak alive.

"They have a better chance than last year because they have a stronger team this year. However, I'm a bit cautious because the last time they did really well at the beginning, they flopped badly. They got too cocky," said Press.

Despite the fact this is the second season in a row the Riders have started off strong, supporters are hoping they don't see a repeat of last year, when after the first three wins the Riders experienced a five-game losing streak, finishing the season in third place in the West Division with an 8-10 record.

Residents ignore voluntary evacuation order

A voluntary evacuation request for eight residences has had little effect, as officials say not a single person has left their residence.

City officials say a slope, which runs between 11th Street East and Saskatchewan Crescent East to the South Saskatchewan River, has moved substantially since they started monitoring it in June. The east slope has moved roughly a metre while the west slope has moved roughly 40 centimetres.

"So far we've had no reported evacuations," said Dan Paulsen, chief of Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services, on Sunday.

However, Rob Frank, strategic services manager with the city, said despite the fact no one has evacuated, the slope is still shifting.

"Today we did a visual inspection and we measured the pins for movement and they're still moving laterally at about a rate of 3.5 centimetres per day," said Frank. "So we still have concern, the slope continues to move and we still have the same message for residents, that we'd like them to voluntarily evacuate."

Paulsen noted while the evacuation is currently voluntary, they will adjust the request accordingly as more data is collected.

"It's going to be based on severity of movement," said Paulsen.

"Right now, it's in excess of a metre that (the slope) has moved already and when the engineers start telling us they have severe concerns or considerations, it can move all the way to what they call a local state of emergency."

Frank explained the slope failure is occurring primarily on private property and the city is asking those affected to hire engineers to evaluate whether or not their homes are safe.

Verdict brings no resolution to killing of Trayvon Martin

Not guilty. Trouble may be far from over for Zimmerman as civil suit, rights case loom

U.S. President Barack Obama urged Americans to respect the decision of jurors on Sunday following the acquittal of George Zimmerman in the death of unarmed teenager Trayvon Martin, a case that has bitterly divided the country since the boy was gunned down more than a year ago.

"I know this case has elicited strong passions," Obama said in a statement, in which he referred to the slaying of the black 17-year-old as a "tragedy."

"But we are a nation of laws, and a jury has spoken. I now ask every American to respect the call for calm reflection from two parents who lost their young son."

Zimmerman's legal problems, however, seemed far from over a day after a jury of six Florida women cleared him of manslaughter and second-degree murder charges — a verdict that stunned civil-rights groups and spurred largely peaceful protests in the streets in several U.S. cities.

The Justice Department said in a statement on Sunday that it's investigating Martin's death to determine whether federal prosecutors should file criminal civil-rights charges now that Zimmerman's been acquitted. The department launched a probe a year ago but stepped aside to allow Florida's prosecution to proceed.

Martin's parents are also considering a wrongful death civil suit against Zimmerman. Sixteen years ago, O.J. Simpson was ordered to pay $25 million US to Nicole Brown Simpson's family, despite his infamous acquittal in criminal court.

The verdict, many argued this weekend, proves the criminal-justice system is still inherently biased against black people, given that Martin, the unarmed victim, was successfully portrayed as the aggressor in the case.

Lac-Mégantic priest struggles at the pulpit

The parish priest in a Quebec town gripped by tragedy said Sunday he struggled to find the words to comfort his flock.

Steve Lemay said he and his colleagues have tried to bring solace to Lac-Mégantic in the week since a train derailment killed an estimated 50 people and razed the town centre.

But he said some residents haven't even begun to grieve. With many questions still unanswered, the loss hasn't fully sunk in, he told reporters outside the Ste-Agnes Church.

"Normally, when we lose someone we love, we can see them, we can make contact," he said. "We don't have that here."

Alberta's new flood-recovery funding regime faces criticism

No easy solution. Plans to avert future disaster provide little consolation for victims

JEREMY NOLAIS
Metro in Calgary

Plans by the Alberta government to ban development in mapped floodways and no longer fund recovery efforts for those continuing to live there were met with sharp criticism from those still recovering from a disaster unlike any previously seen in the province.

Officials took the veil off new rules for funding and development during a technical briefing Sunday morning, a little more than three weeks after rivers surged to levels not seen in a lifetime, displacing tens of thousands of Southern Albertans and leading to billions of dollars in damages.

Some homes in the town of High River remain underwater even now.

Going forward, all municipalities will be prohibited from approving new developments in known floodways, and residents opting to continue living in those areas will no longer receive disaster-recovery funding for damage caused in future floods, Municipal Affairs Minister Doug Griffiths announced.

In addition, any homes located in Alberta's "flood fringe" areas will be required to undertake mitigation efforts — raising a home using piers or columns, erecting berms or flood walls and water-sealing a residence were examples provided — if they wish to receive recovery funding going forward.

"For Albertans who have endured this disaster and face an uncertain future, I want you all to know one thing: our government is here for you," Griffiths said, adding compensation for those choosing to move out of a floodway will be determined on a "case-by-case" basis.

Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi said there are questions about the accuracy of provincial flood mapping, which will provide the only guideline on which homes reside in the floodway and flood fringe.

"I don't have much of a philosophical problem with what they're saying," Nenshi said, before adding, "I am surprised the province would announce such sweeping changes in the absence of any consultation whatsoever with affected municipalities." WITH FILES FROM DARREN KRAUSE

Sarah and David Carlson believe their soon-to-be finished home in Calgary's Roxboro area is flood-proof, but because half of their land is in a mapped floodway, it's possible they will not receive any recovery funding in future disasters. JEREMY NOLAIS/METRO

Grey area

The province will be supplementing some of the funding for mitigation efforts, but for many in the flood zones the new policy added to what they already saw as the worst three weeks of their lives.

- David and Sarah Carlson were busy constructing a $3-4-million home in the southwest community of Roxboro when the floodwaters surged.
- The pair had already torn down the previous home on the lot and worked diligently to make the home flood-proof.
- But their property is divided in two on the provincial mapping — half is in a floodway and half in a flood fringe — and the pair questioned what that would mean for them going forward.

Manitoba village bears brunt of possible tornado

A trailer lies on its side after an unconfirmed tornado touched down in the regional municipality of Pipestone, Man., Saturday. @SNIPE_ALL_DAY/TWITTER

The reeve of Pipestone, Man., is relieved no one was seriously injured after what Environment Canada says was likely a tornado tore through the rural municipality Saturday night.

"It ripped the roofs off buildings, flipped a mobile (home), took a part of the hall and part of the rink — so it was pretty severe," Ross Tycoles told Metro Sunday morning from his home in Reston. "It was bad enough here, but Pipestone is the one that really got it."

Tycoles said the fast-moving storm — which dropped hail as big as golf balls in the area as it moved into the southwest corner of Manitoba, along Highway 2 from Saskatchewan, around 6 p.m. — levelled a number of trees and knocked out power for the Village of Pipestone's more than 200 people.

"Hydro is going to be an issue; there were lots of downed power lines," explained Tycoles, who said power remained disabled in Pipestone Sunday morning. "They shut the power off in town until they can reassess (the damage) to be safe."

The reeve said the only injuries reported were a couple of people who cut their hands from broken glass.

Environment Canada

"Did it actually reach the ground? We haven't received any report, but it's highly possible that it was a tornado."
Meteorologist Mark Gerlyand

The storm couldn't have come at a worse time for the RM of Pipestone, which declared a state of emergency in late June after heavy rains brought more than six inches of water in about six hours to Reston.

Environment Canada meteorologist Mark Gerlyand said the storm moved over Pipestone within two hours before losing steam as it went eastward.

While Gerlyand hasn't seen any photos verifying a funnel cloud touched down, he said there was a report of a tornado from the village of Pipestone around 7 p.m., and radar information did show cyclone activity in the air at the time. SHANE GIBSON/METRO IN WINNIPEG

Determined Philippine newcomer asks the right questions to find her way

"Don't be afraid to ask questions, because people here want to help immigrants," says newcomer Carrie Palaganas. Determined to succeed, she took that approach during her first weeks in Canada, arriving with her husband and teenage son in the midst of the Edmonton winter.

"It was really difficult since we came from 28 degrees to –28 degrees, and we did not have enough warm clothes," recalls Carrie, a former banker and registered nurse who left the Philippines to access better opportunities for her son.

"Fortunately I had some living angels here," gushes Carrie, speaking of her immigration agent, her family and a high school friend who moved to Alberta a decade earlier. "With their help, we found winter clothes, got our paperwork organized and found an apartment in the city and on the school bus routes."

Carrie was also impressed by the team at the Edmonton Commercial Banking Centre and Main Branch, including Customer Service Officer Janelle Brideau, who alleviated her concerns about protecting the savings the family brought to Canada.

"Banking is very complicated here, with so many different accounts, but they helped us choose the right package with the best benefits," says Carrie, referring to the Scotiabank StartRight® Program.[1] Through the StartRight Program, Carrie received a free day-to-day bank account for one year[2], a wide range of credit card options[3] and a number of other customized services and benefits. "I realized that a credit card is important because you need to build credit history if you want to buy a car or house someday."

While Carrie praises the kindness of others, she made a point of seeking advisors to answer her questions, even among fellow commuters who helped her navigate the transit system. "In the Philippines, everything was just around the corner," she laughs.

Carrie also showed perseverance to succeed. When she realized it would take time to recertify as a nurse, she applied her personality and bank work experience to earn a position at Scotiabank as a customer representative. "Now I can make other newcomers comfortable," says Carrie. "The other day a customer remarked, 'Thank goodness there is a Filipino here,' since she preferred to conduct her banking in our native dialect."

From her own experience, Carrie urges newcomers to, "Find a good bank that has nice people who want to know you and help you start a new life. Don't be afraid to ask questions to understand all the facts."

"In general, I would tell other immigrants to be strong and hang on, because this is a better place and people here will help you," concludes Carrie. "Today, I can see the sun is shining."

THIS ADVERTORIAL IS PREPARED BY SCOTIABANK®.

Flight 214. Asiana payout to depend on nationality

When the courts have to figure compensation for people aboard Flight 214, the potential payouts will probably be vastly different for Americans and passengers from other countries, even if they were seated side by side as the Asiana jetliner crash-landed.

An international treaty governs compensation to passengers harmed by international air travel — from damaged luggage to crippling injuries and death. The pact is likely to close U.S. courts to many foreigners and force them to pursue their claims in Asia and elsewhere, where lawsuits are rarer, harder to win and offer smaller payouts.

The flight that broke apart Saturday at the San Francisco airport was carrying 141 Chinese, 77 South Koreans, 64 Americans, three Canadians, three Indians, one Japanese, one Vietnamese and one person from France when it approached the runway too low and too slow. The Boeing 777 hit a seawall before skittering across the tarmac and catching fire.

Three girls from China were killed and 182 people injured, most not seriously. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cyber security in private sector a big problem: Records

Gaps in the cyber-security efforts of Canadian corporations could be leaving them open to sophisticated attacks by hackers, records show.

"The current situation is that there are an increasing number of new software vulnerabilities that can be exploited to gain access to companies' networks," reads a July 2012 memo obtained from Public Safety Canada under the Access to Information Act.

"The scale of the problem is significant. The cost of maintaining a highly secure network is high for each company, and they may not be willing to make that investment."

The smooth operation of critical infrastructure assets is integral to the country's economic, political and social well-being, according to a report by the auditor general published last fall. But despite a commitment to protecting critical infrastructure, the federal government has been slow to build partnerships with stakeholders, the report states. THE CANADIAN PRESS

New bones about it: Floods fuelling fossil finds

Cody Van Megen's dog Moose examines one of many large bones found while walking along the banks of the Bow River, heavily eroded by recent flooding, in Calgary on Friday. While Van Megen was bracing for signs of devastation, he didn't expect to find a set of gigantic rib bones sticking out of the riverbank. Van Megen got in touch with Francois Therrien, a paleontologist at the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller, Alta. Therrien told him the bones were unlikely to be from a dinosaur, but the discovery could be significant, potentially signalling an early bison fossil. A team will examine the bones in August. J.K. Rowling revealed as 'new' crime writer

An ex-military man tries his hand at writing, publishes a debut detective novel, and wins critical acclaim. But here's the twist in the tale: The true identity of the author is none other than Harry Potter creator J.K. Rowling.

It's impressive literary wizardry by Rowling, who said she relished the freedom of writing The Cuckoo's Calling under her pseudonym, Robert Galbraith.

"I hoped to keep this secret a little longer," she said in a statement released by her publicist on Sunday. "It has been wonderful to publish without hype or expectation, and pure pleasure to get feedback from publishers and readers under a different name."

The Cuckoo's Calling, a story about a war veteran turned private investigator who is called in to probe the mysterious death of a model, was published to rave reviews in April.

The Sunday Times claimed it was investigating "how a first-time author with a background in the army and the civilian security industry could write such an assured debut novel" when it connected the dots. The paper said clues included the fact that Rowling and Galbraith shared the same agent and editor, and that Little, Brown published Rowling's other adult novel. It also said the book's style and subject resembled Rowling's work.

Bots and crops meet again

On a windy morning in California's Salinas Valley, a tractor pulled a refrigerator-sized contraption over rows of budding iceberg lettuce plants. Engineers from Silicon Valley tinkered with the software on a laptop to ensure the machine was eliminating the right buds.

Hired by a Salinas-based agricultural produce company, the engineers were testing the Lettuce Bot, a machine that can "thin" a field of lettuce in the time it takes about 20 workers to do the job by hand.

The thinner is part of a new generation of machines that target the last frontier of agricultural mechanization — fruits and vegetables destined for the fresh market, which have thus far resisted mechanization because they're sensitive to bruising.

In this region known as America's Salad Bowl, the machines could prove revolutionary. Though they cost millions, farmers say the robots are worth the investment: They could provide relief from recent labour shortages, lessen the unknowns of immigration reform, and even reduce costs, increase quality and yield a more consistent product.

But farm-worker advocates say mechanization would lead to workers losing jobs, growers using more pesticides and the food supply becoming less safe. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TRY SOME DEMOCRATIC EXCESS

URBAN COMPASS

Hilary Nelson
saskatoon@metronews.ca

I've been having sober third and fourth thoughts about the Senate in Canada. I wish my perspective were as black-and-white as Premier Brad Wall's and the Saskatchewan Party's, which last week voted in favour of Senate abolition.

Initially created to tamp down the "democratic excesses" of the House of Commons — hence Sir John A. Macdonald's famous statement about it being the chamber of "sober second thought" — the Senate was a means of subtly reinforcing the superiority of the landed gentry over any elected rabble.

I don't know about you, but I could go for a little democratic excess right about now.

We haven't had a full performance audit of the Senate or the House of Commons for a very, very long time, and the senators and MPs prefer to keep it that way. What other horrors lurk beneath the $90,000 cheque made out by the prime minister's former chief of staff?

Barring a whistleblower emerging, it's unlikely we'll find out. And the current fad for abolition shows that the proponents aren't really interested in cleaning up the mess, just throwing the bums out. Sometimes, I feel rather sorry for the senators involved — until I see their pension packages. That's possibly why the Senate scandal has gripped the nation: It's easy to understand $90,000. It's harder to grasp, say, $3 billion.

Let's have some movement on this either way, not just posturing. Abolition, reformation — it's the same we've been hearing for more than 30 years. Abolition is just trendy right now because certain senators couldn't manage to remember their addresses.

If we're going through all this trouble to abolish the Senate, we should be talking about instituting proportional representation as well. Other countries with unicameral systems — that is, only one chamber or house — have some form of it.

The Senate attempts to make up for some imbalances in the House of Commons, but it's heavily weighted toward the first provinces in Confederation. Ironically, Quebec is the only body that has something approaching proportional representation in the Red Chamber. Not to mention the partisan setup of the Senate doesn't inspire confidence; layering party politics on top of unelected appointees makes for a murky situation, especially when it comes to writing cheques.

Mr. Wall's referendum means we have one political party in power in one province that has a majority of members who agree that the Senate should be abolished. It's a start, I suppose. Other premiers have come out for and against the Senate, but there's no consensus.

The current system is not ideal — due both to the actors involved and the makeup of the system itself — but I'm not enthusiastic we'll see any meaningful change as long as it's used as a political football to score points with the populace.

At any rate, it's far from the last we'll hear of the Senate in this province. Sen. Pamela Wallin's audit is set to wrap up at the end of the month.

Today's weak labour market for youth is not only hurting young Canadians. It's also taking a financial toll on their middle-class parents.

There are still 200,000 fewer jobs for young Canadians than before the recession. According to TD Bank, young Canadians are not only losing out today, they also face lower wages for more than a decade as they try to catch up on missed work experience. A growing number of 20-somethings are now competing for unpaid internships in an attempt to get ahead.

While job prospects for young Canadians have deteriorated, the price of everything from tuition to rent and groceries has gone up. Yet student debt levels have remained relatively constant. So who is picking up the tab?

It's middle-class parents who are stepping in to financially support their adult children.

According to TD, more than half of baby-boom parents have continued to financially support their adult children, even after they leave school. Instead of listening to Canadians on this issue, the Harper Conservatives have cut the number of youth jobs in the Canada Summer Jobs Program by more than half, and frozen the skills training budget at 2008 levels without allowing for either inflation or population growth.

Glee star Cory Monteith was found dead in a Vancouver hotel room on Saturday. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Remembering Monteith

United in grief. Celebrities, fans send out condolences to Glee actor's family, police won't speculate on cause of death

Tributes from celebrities and fans of the popular television series Glee were pouring in on social media Sunday as those who admire Canadian actor Cory Monteith learned of his sudden death.

The 31-year-old actor, who shot to fame as football player and singer Finn Hudson on the popular television series, was found dead at a downtown Vancouver hotel room on Saturday.

Police told reporters the cause of death still must be determined, but investigators do not believe foul play was involved.

Once news broke of Monteith's death, fellow celebrities and Glee cast members took to Twitter to express their condolences.

Dot-Marie Jones, who plays Coach Shannon Beiste, wrote, "I am blessed to have worked with him and love him so much. My heart is with his family and our whole Glee family. I love you all."

And Lauren Potter, who plays cheerleader Becky Jackson said, "I am totally heartbroken right now. I love Cory so much this hurts my heart. I hope my Glee family is OK right now. I love them all. Cory was always so nice to me. I have so many good memories."

Monteith's co-star and girlfriend Lea Michele, who plays Finn's girlfriend onscreen, has issued a brief statement, requesting privacy.

Fans from B.C., where Monteith grew up, also mourned the death of the local celebrity.

"When I first saw Glee, I was ecstatic for Cory. A local boy and a great guy. My thoughts to his family and friends. He will be remembered," wrote Vancouver actor Osric Chau.

The executive producers of Glee and Fox also issued a statement on Saturday night, saying, "We are deeply saddened by this tragic news. Cory was an exceptional talent and an even more exceptional person. He was a true joy to work with and we will all miss him tremendously. Our thoughts and prayers are with his family and loved ones."

Acting Vancouver Police Chief Doug LePard told reporters on Saturday that Monteith's body was found around noon after he failed to check out from his room as scheduled. LePard said the actor had been with some other people in the room the night before, but video and electronic records show that Monteith entered the room by himself on Saturday morning.

His death comes several months after he told People magazine that he had admitted himself into rehab for substance abuse, but police declined to speculate whether there was any connection.

Monteith, who has been open about having suffered from drug addiction when he was younger, was born in Calgary and raised in Victoria, where his mother still lives.

Peripatetic Monteith

Before becoming an actor, Monteith worked as a Walmart people greeter in Nanaimo, B.C., as well as a taxicab driver, school bus driver and roofer. He had minor roles in other films before joining the cast of Glee, which debuted in 2009. He also was drummer for the California-based band Bonnie Dune, and was an avid supporter of the Project Limelight Society, a Vancouver charity that offers a theatre program to at-risk youth.

Orange is the New Black. New Netflix series about a socialite doing time puts a female spin on life as an inmate

The new Netflix series Orange is the New Black opens with the provocative image of two naked women in a shower, entwined in a passionate embrace. It's the kind of brazen kickoff obviously designed to grab attention, but star Taylor Schilling says the show's envelope-pushing nudity is different — this time the salacious scenes come from a resolutely female point-of-view.

"It doesn't to me feel like it's as sexualized as other scripts that I've read," Schilling said by phone from New York of the dramedy.

Schilling stars as privileged Brooklyn socialite Piper Chapman, who is slapped with a 15-month sentence at a U.S. federal penitentiary when authorities link her to a hard-as-nails female drug-runner she romanced — and ferried cash for — more than a decade earlier.

Schilling lauds an array of racially diverse actresses who fill out the cast and praises Kohan for offering a rare chance to see a variety of female characters on the small screen. Even the blond and seemingly delicate character Piper challenges convention, she said.

"It's a moment of divine intervention I think when you find a role that can really be a full-bodied woman, and actually I mean that in every sense of the word," said Schilling.

Getting into Wolverine-style shape

Hugh Jackman admits he isn't afraid of stealing workout techniques from other actors — like Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson — if it means getting into tip top Wolverine shape.

"I know Dwayne and I rang him and said, 'Buddy, I saw you in the Tooth Fairy, and then I saw you in an action movie and you are massive. How do you do it?'" Jackman tells E! News. "Right as he's telling me the whole diet, someone knocked on his trailer door — and I'll never forget this moment. He goes, 'Hold on a second! I'm talking to Wolverine. You can tell them I said they can wait.'"

Look awkward, be safe

Faux tattoos help identify allergies

Just when you thought childhood awkwardness couldn't get any more … awkward, there's always something to take it to the next level.

This time around it's SafetyTats. The premise of the invention is to identify children's allergies or other vital information through temporary tattoos that can be applied anywhere on the body.

There are two different types of SafetyTats. The original ones, which are applied like regular temporary tattoos, come with standard allergy messages (such as "food allergy: nuts") and quick stick write-ons, which come in various neon colors, apply similar to a Band-Aid and allow users to write custom allergy messages.

"I remember going to an amusement park one weekend with my three kids and thinking 'I don't want to have to worry about them getting lost,'" said SafetyTats creator Michele Welsh. "I wrote my cellphone number on their arms with a ball point pen but eventually it rubbed off during the day and that's when I knew that I had to create something else."

The original safety tats last approximately three to five days depending on the activeness of the child. The quick stick write-ons last up to two weeks and are waterproof.

A boys with dustpans, girls on lawn mowers revolution

Gender roles. Our expert weighs in on a study that says siblings can have a large impact on gender stereotyping

IT'S ALL RELATIVE
Kathy Buckworth, kathybuckworth.com

"Men with sisters appear to do less housework, even in middle age." A provocative and, I think, curious statement to make.

Yet, according to a paper published in the Journal of Politics, decades of data have led to this conclusion. The data suggest that siblings can have as large an impact on gender stereotyping as parents can when it comes to the running of a home.

The report goes as far as to say that the roles of brother and sister can resemble those of husband and wife. (Frankly, the only way my kids resemble a husband and wife is in a Bickersons arguing sort of way.)

How to prevent this from happening in our own home? I'm thinking maybe we could start with the philosophy of "It's only work if you're not having fun." I say this, as due to my excellent parenting skills, (or admittedly by some strange fluke), I happen to have tricked my youngest son, 11, into thinking that housework is fun.

They're paying attention

"The study tells us that our kids are watching … how we divvy up the chores we do as adults."
Kathy Buckworth

He routinely mops the kitchen floor, vacuums, and sprays glass cleaner on glass cleanable surfaces with wild abandon. He requested, and received, his very own toilet brush, that he also uses with surprising frequency. He does all of this … for fun. In fact, the day that school ended he asked if he could mop as a sort of "welcome to summer holidays treat." I magnanimously let him.

He does have siblings (a brother and two sisters), none of whom would even pick up a duster unless it were on fire, and probably not even then unless I threatened to take their phones away.

Maybe the fact that there is another brother in the house counteracts the unintentional yet subliminal boy versus girl housecleaning message. Whatever the case, the theory doesn't seem to hold water in my house.

But if that's what the research shows for other families, maybe on the whole we need to do something about this, mostly to save our daughters, and our son's future partners from having to pick up the slack, and the dirty clothes, thanks to our own procreation of boys.

The study tells us that our kids are watching us — how we divvy up the chores we do as adults and how we assign chores to our children.

Does your daughter mow the lawn? Does your son set the table? Do you have "boy jobs" and "girl jobs" in your house? Do they get to pick their chores? Take some time to mix it up this week.

Unfortunately I can't lend my own son out, as the floors need cleaning at my house.

Ga ga goo goo, where's my Tortle?

Amid the purveyors of belly casts and placenta pills, sonogram art and cord blood banks at a recent baby gear extravaganza stood a smiling Rosie Pope, pregnancy advice guru, mommy concierge to the rich and, with any luck, the Martha Stewart of maternity.

"There's Rachael Ray for cooking and Rachel Zoe for style, but who in motherhood? That's my dream," said the affable mom of three as she signed copies of her pregnancy guide, Mommy IQ, showed off her maternity clothing line and chatted up fans at this year's New York Baby Show.

Making sense of maternity and baby gear these days isn't easy, so Pope may just get her shot. More than a few moms-to-be were befuddled as they walked the crowded show floor.

There's the Tortle, for example. It's an infant hat with a soft wedge built in to battle flat head syndrome. And there's Clean Bee Baby, an eco-friendly cleaning service for strollers and car seats.

There were also numerous reinventions of the wearable baby carrier, bright and cheery seats and rides of all kinds, including one that looks like an actual car, and all-natural everything, from squeezable baby fruit to Kinder by Nature herbal wipes, loaded with certified organic aloe vera, tea tree and ylang ylang extracts.

Pope offered her view on the explosion of gear for mom, dad and baby.

"There's so much we do not need," she said. "What we do need is a safe place for the baby to sleep. We do need a safe car seat. We do need a stroller system that the car seat can snap into. What we do need is some clothes. What we don't need is shoes and hair accessories and wipe warmers and bottle warmers and all of this sort of extra stuff that really is just adding complication to what you're doing rather than making your life easier."

This recipe serves four. KAREN HUMPHREY OF YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA

Ingredients

- 2 cups bow tie pasta
- 1 cup halved grape tomatoes
- 1/4 cup thinly sliced red onion
- 1 cup chopped cucumber
- 1/2 sweet yellow pepper, seeded and chopped
- 1/2 sweet red pepper, seeded and chopped
- 4 oz feta cheese, crumbled
- 1/4 cup black olives, sliced
- 2 tbsp chopped fresh dill

Dressing

- 3 tsp balsamic vinegar
- 2 tbsp olive oil
- 1/4 tsp honey
- salt and pepper
- squirt mustard

1. In pot of boiling salted water, cook pasta according to package directions. Drain and rinse with cool water. Set aside.

2. Toss pasta with tomatoes, onion, cucumber, peppers, feta, olives, and dill.

3. Measure dressing ingredients in a mason jar. Screw on lid and shake until everything is well mixed together. Drizzle over pasta and toss. You don't have to use all the dressing. 1. Heat the grill to medium. Heat the oven to 400 F.

2. While the grill and oven are heating, in a blender combine half of the feta, the lemon juice, buttermilk and olive oil. Blend until smooth. Season with pepper, then stir in the remaining feta. Set aside.

3. Split each pita pocket into 2 rounds. Spray the rough sides of each round lightly with the cooking spray, then sprinkle lightly with salt. Cut each round into 8 triangles. On a rimmed baking sheet arrange the triangles in a single layer. Bake on the middle shelf of the oven until golden and crisp, about 8 minutes. Set aside to cool.

4. Spray the pork with the olive oil spray, then season it lightly with salt and pepper. Grill it directly over the heat, turning it a quarter turn at a time, until a thermometer inserted at the thickest part registers 140 F to 145 F for medium, about 6 minutes per side. Transfer the pork to a plate, cover it loosely with foil and let it rest for 10 minutes.

5. In a large bowl, combine the arugula, onion, mint, cilantro, watermelon and cucumber. Add the pork juices from the resting pork to the feta dressing, whisking to incorporate. Place a mound of the salad on each of 4 plates. Slice the pork crosswise into rounds 1/2 inch thick and arrange a quarter of the slices on top of each mound of salad. Drizzle the dressing on top of the pork, then divide the pita croutons between the plates. Serve immediately. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/ SARA MOULTON, AUTHOR OF SARA MOULTON'S EVERYDAY FAMILY DINNER.

Ingredients

- 4 oz feta cheese, crumbled, divided
- 1 tbsp lemon juice
- 1/3 cup buttermilk
- 1 tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- Ground black pepper
- Two 6-inch whole-wheat pita pockets
- Olive oil cooking spray
- Kosher salt
- 1-lb pork tenderloin, trimmed
- 3 cups arugula
- 1/2 cup thinly sliced red onion
- 1/2 cup each fresh mint leaves and cilantro leaves
- 2 cups cubed and seeded watermelon
- 1 cup cubed seedless cucumber

Lunch. Light Pasta Salad

1. Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil.

2. Meanwhile, in serving bowl toss tomatoes with few hefty pinches of salt and some black pepper. Let stand 10 minutes, then add the lemon zest, oil and goat cheese and toss well.

3. Add pasta to boiling water, stir and cook according to package instructions until just al dente. Drain the pasta, then add it to the bowl. Toss until the cheese is melted. Taste and season with salt and pepper to taste. Divide the pasta between 4 serving bowls, then sprinkle each portion with some of the herbs. Serve.

Come for a cold one, stay for the sites: Beer can mean big business for cities

Happily ever crafter. The transformation of a once-forgotten neighbourhood in Cleveland paints a picture of the way in which breweries can bring on a boom

Brewer Joel Warger tends to a batch of beer in the Great Lakes Brewing Co. in Cleveland's Ohio City neighbourhood. In rundown urban neighbourhoods across the country, craft breweries like Great Lakes helped transform the neighbourhoods around them, drawing young new residents and other small businesses.

ADRIAN WYLD / THE CANADIAN PRESS

To see how a small business can transform a neighbourhood, just follow the barrels.

About 30 years ago, beer lovers wanting to create their own drinks started taking over abandoned old buildings in rundown city districts, refitting them with tanks, kettles and casks, and churning out beer.

The byproduct was a boom in craft beer drinkers: Barrels shipped have more than doubled in the past decade, according to trade publication Beer Marketer's Insights.

But beer drinkers weren't the only beneficiaries. The arrival of a craft brewery was also often one of the first signs that a neighbourhood was changing. From New England to the West Coast, new businesses bubbled up around breweries, drawing young people and creating a vibrant community where families could plant roots and small businesses could thrive.

It happened in Cleveland. Once an industrial powerhouse, the Rust Belt city has been losing residents since the 1950s. Manufacturing jobs disappeared. The city nearly went bankrupt in 1978.

Marred by abandoned buildings and boarded-up stores after several hard decades, the downtown Ohio City neighbourhood, just west of the Cuyahoga River, which divides Cleveland, was "perceived as dangerous and blighted" into the 1980s, says Eric Wobser. He works for Ohio City Inc., a non-profit that promotes residential and commercial development while trying to preserve the neighbourhood's older buildings.

Enter Great Lakes Brewing, which opened in 1988. Over the years, it's built a brewery and a brewpub from structures that once housed a feed store, a saloon and a livery stable.

"We resurrected all of them," says Pat Conway, who founded Great Lakes with his brother, Daniel. "We've beautified the neighbourhood, provided a stunning restoration."

Other breweries and businesses — a pasta maker, a bike shop, a tortilla factory, as well as restaurants and bars — followed. Newcomers are flocking to the neighbourhood, even though Cleveland's overall population is still declining. The city repaved the quiet street next to the brewery, Market Avenue, with cobblestones, and poured millions into renovating the West Side Market, whose origins date back to the 19th century.

Today, more than 100 vendors sell produce, meat, cheese and other foods there. What's going on in Cleveland is happening across the country.

Trendy small businesses like breweries and younger residents have been returning to downtown neighbourhoods in many cities across the U.S. The biggest cities are growing faster than the suburbs around them, according to census data.

Another benefit of the brewery boom: Manufacturers like brewers typically pay workers more than service businesses like restaurants or shops do. That's good for local economies.

Verlander's no-hit bid falls short

Justin Verlander's no-hit bid was finally over in the seventh inning — and before refocusing, the Detroit ace saw his shortstop do something amusing.

"When the double was hit, and the ball came back in, everybody started cheering," Verlander said. "(Jhonny) Peralta caught the ball and looked up at the board checking the hits. That's when I knew he didn't know. I was like, 'Come on, Jhonny.'"

Verlander fell seven outs short of his third career no-hitter, but the Detroit ace looked sharp in his final start before the all-star break to lead the Tigers to a 5-0 victory over the Texas Rangers on Sunday.

Mitch Moreland's two-out double to right-centre broke up Verlander's bid. Verlander (10-6) left the game after the seventh with a tight right quad muscle, having allowed just that one hit and three walks. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MLB. Davis helps Orioles win series over division rival, rolling into all-star break with 37 round-trippers

On Sunday

7	4
Orioles	Blue Jays

With one final power surge before the all-star break, Chris Davis earned himself a place in baseball's record book and generated momentum for the Home Run Derby.

Davis hit his 37th home run to tie the AL mark prior to the break, and the Baltimore Orioles cruised past the Toronto Blue Jays 7-4 Sunday.

Davis doubled in two runs in the first inning and hit a two-run homer in the third to give him 93 RBIs, second-most in the majors behind Detroit's Miguel Cabrera. He and Cabrera are the only players in major-league history to have 30 homers and 90 RBIs before the all-star game.

"Superhuman," Toronto manager John Gibbons said. "He's having some kind of year. I saw him a little bit when he was in Texas coming up. He could always hit home runs. He got his opportunity here to play every day and he's taken advantage of it. It's pretty impressive."

By going deep in a fourth straight game, Davis equalled Reggie Jackson's AL mark of 37 homers before the break, set in 1969. The major-league record is 39, by Barry Bonds in 2001.

Davis has already reached career highs in home runs and RBIs with 66 games left in the regular season.

"I think it's something definitely to be proud of," Davis said. "It means I've been doing my job, but it also speaks volumes about the guys in front of me getting on base and really swinging the bats well."

Davis has been facing a shift lately, but there's no defending a ball that clears the wall.

"You can't shift to the stands," Orioles manager Buck Showalter said. "They don't allow you to put anybody out there. So hit it where the grass doesn't grow." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Track-and-field. Jamaican sprinters test positive for banned stimulants

Former 100-metre world-record holder Asafa Powell and Jamaican teammate Sherone Simpson have each tested positive for banned stimulants, their agent told The Associated Press.

Powell and Simpson tested positive for the stimulant oxilofrine at the Jamaican championships last month and were just recently notified, Paul Doyle said Sunday.

Powell helped the Jamaicans to the 400-metre relay gold medal at the 2008 Olympics and was the last man to hold the individual 100 record before countryman Usain Bolt broke it earlier that year.

Simpson won Olympic gold in the women's 400 relay in 2004 and silver in 2012, along with an individual silver in the 100 in 2008. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Great son: Trevor Gretzky arrives in B.C.

Baseball. Minor-league outfielder swarmed by media as his Boise Hawks prepare for series in Vancouver

Trevor Gretzky of the Boise Hawks, son of Canadian hockey legend Wayne Gretzky, stands on the field during his game against the Vancouver Canadians on Saturday. The Hawks won 5-4. JEFF VINNICK /TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Trevor Gretzky arrived in Vancouver on Wednesday for baseball, but it's his hockey roots that are drawing attention his way.

As an outfielder with the Boise Hawks, Gretzky is in town for a five-game series against the Toronto Blue Jays' Class-A short season affiliate, the Vancouver Canadians. But he is under no illusions about what's causing the spotlight around him.

"I know it happens because of my dad," said Gretzky, whose father Wayne played 21 seasons in the National Hockey League, bringing four Stanley Cup championships to the city of Edmonton, and winning the Hart Trophy for the league's most valuable player nine times.

The baseball-playing Gretzky grew up in Los Angeles, ditching hockey at a young age to focus on football and baseball.

"If I had grown up in Canada I would've probably played hockey," he said.

As a teenager at Oaks Christian High School in California, Gretzky was named starting quarterback of the prep school's football team. Three games into his senior season, however, a shoulder injury halted his young football career.

So Gretzky turned his sights back to baseball and in 2011, he was drafted by the Chicago Cubs in the seventh round of the MLB amateur draft.

Gretzky played last season in the Arizona Rookie League, batting .304 in 25 games.

"I kind of always knew I was going to come back to baseball," he said. "I just didn't know when."

Before Boise's trip to Vancouver, Gretzky was in and out of the lineup, making appearances in just eight of the Hawks' first 25 games. Since Wednesday, he's earned three straight starts.

Through 11 games this season, Gretzky is batting .256 with 10 hits and one RBI.

Canadian offence goes dark in Gold Cup ouster

Canada was eliminated from the CONCACAF Gold Cup on Sunday in Denver after a scoreless draw against Panama in both teams' final game of the preliminary round.

Neither side created much in the way of chances in a game that Canada had to win in order to have any chance of advancing to the knockout stage.

Canada exits the tournament having not scored a goal after losses to Martinique and Mexico preceded Sunday's result.

Canada was lucky to have not gone a goal down in the 18th minute when defender Ashtone Morgan failed to clear a Panamanian cross. The ball fell to Marcos Sanchez, who had time and space, but his curling right-footed effort went wide.

The Canadians had their best chance of the half 10 minutes later when Marcel de Jong's corner kick found defender David Edgar, but he was unable to make clean contact with his head.

MLB. Giants' Lincecum keeps it cool after tossing first career no-hitter

Tim Lincecum walked into the San Francisco Giants clubhouse late Sunday morning and, yes, his right arm was still attached to his body.

That was no small matter, considering that Lincecum threw 148 pitches in his first career no-hitter Saturday night.

The Freak, indeed.

While he was still trying to put his no-hitter into perspective, Lincecum said his arm was OK after his incredible effort in the San Francisco Giants' 9-0 victory against the last-place San Diego Padres.

"I haven't played catch yet but right now I feel good," he said before the Giants' 10-1 loss to the Padres on Sunday.

Lincecum looks different now that he's cut his long hair, and he doesn't throw quite as hard as he used to. One thing hasn't changed, though. Lincecum has never iced his arm after starts, including his 148-pitch performance.

It turns out there was no ice of any kind Saturday night.

"Not even in the drinks that I didn't have last night," he said with a laugh.

"I said to him, 'One time, can you ice it?'" manager Bruce Bochy recalled.

Lincecum, a two-time NL Cy Young Award winner, said he had a low-key celebration. He spoke by phone with his father and spent time with his girlfriend and his two dogs. He said he didn't get to sleep until around 3:30 a.m.

"I woke up today, so I'm good," he said.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You may not be a peacemaker by nature but you can help defuse an explosive situation by standing between the warring parties and insisting that they cool down.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
The only danger this week is that you might give up on something before you have really started. However difficult the task ahead of you may look it is not impossible and failure is not a foregone conclusion.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
You may sometimes act as if you don't care about what's going on in the world but you do and over the next few days you will find ways to make a difference.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Listen to your head by all means today but let your heart have the last word. Your emotions run deep and someone is about ignite your passions in a way they have not been ignited for quite some time.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
As it's the first day of a new week why not put your troubles behind you completely? Is that actually possible? Of course it is. Your reality is a reflection of what goes on in your mind.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Whatever you are working on you can and you will make a success of it, even if you make a few mistakes in the short-term. It's no big deal.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You have been through a stressful time of late, so wind down a bit and find ways to have fun without pushing yourself too hard physically or emotionally. Be kind to yourself today, and every day.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You deserve the best and you will get the best but it may not arrive quite as quickly as you expected. That's okay. The longer you have to wait the better the taste of success will be.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
What worried you yesterday is not what will worry you today and what worries you today won't be what worries you tomorrow. Which begs the question: why worry at all?

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Don't just assume that someone knows how much you care for them: spell it out so there can be no misunderstandings. Capricorn may have a reputation as being a bit of a cold fish but it's not true. You're really all heart.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be behind in your schedule and you may be worrying how you can catch up but is there really any point? You know from experience that it will all work out in the end.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It will pay you to be a bit more forgiving of people who have let you down or who do not come up to your exacting standards. SALLY BROMPTON
